7. Disability

A disabled person under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is anyone with a “physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long term adverse effect on his or her ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities”.

This definition can be broken down to help explain the meaning of disability.

Physical impairment: examples would be blindness, deafness, paralysis of a leg, heart disease and progressive conditions.

Mental impairment: includes a clinical well-recognised mental illness and/or what is commonly known as a learning disability.

Substantial: put simply, this means the effect of the impairment on ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities is more than minor or trivial.

Long term: 12 months, or recurring, or past long term disability.

Normal day-to day activity: such as washing, eating, catching a bus or turning on a television.

Do you consider yourself to have a disability? Yes No

If yes, what is the nature of your disability? _____
